

The Atlanta Falcons got off to a bad start this year losing their first five games before firing their Coach and General Manager. Like all NFL teams, they had supported worthy causes such as childrens' hospitals and they had participated in the sanctification and public worship of the US Military, but somewhere along the way, perhaps inspired by the anti-voter suppression efforts of Stacey Abrams, the team woke up, started winning, and reached out to high school players and coaches across the state to enlist them in voter turnout. If their successful efforts can be repeated for the January's Senatorial runoff elections, they, not the winners of Super Bowl LV on February 7th in a mostly empty stadium in Tampa, should be invited to the White House as the real champions of this dramatic year.

CCN

The Cat Cartoon Network
Fair and Nuanced
All the rats fit to trap